KEYSTONE VALLEY FARM Corneli's Trial Grounds

HERE are some actual photographs taken at "KEYSTONE VALLEY FARM" where KEYSTONE SEEDS are tested in the ground so that we are certain what we tell you about them, actually proves to be true when they are planted on the farm and the crop is harvested. A farmer puts in his time and his land fully expecting to get a good crop and yet if he does not plant the best seed, seed that is absolutely clean, viable and adapted to his conditions, he is wasting his time, his land, and his money. The seed he plants is the only element he really controls for the soil is what it is and he has no control over the weather. If he plants poor seed he cannot possibly raise as much as he would if he planted the best. The farmer is the one benefited most but of course it means much to you as a dealer as your income naturally increases when crops are good.

Do you use this sales argument when your customers want to plant untested seeds that they can buy cheap from a neighbor? There are lots of good reasons that can be advanced in the argument for good seeds. The loss in planting weedy seed should be sufficient, but good germination and adaptability is also important. There is nothing you handle that is any more important than the seeds you sell and there is nothing that can build up greater confidence in you than the fact that the seeds you sell produce abundantly.

But what has this to do with KEYSTONE VALLEY FARM? Just this, you cannot possibly secure the confidence of your farmers as a reliable source for seeds unless the seeds you sell actually produce what you say they will. You have confidence in us who supply you so we in turn make sure that what we sell you is what we say it is.

Each year over 2000 different lots of garden and field seeds are tested in these trial grounds and are thoroughly checked so that you might rest secure in that confidence that must be at the base of all satisfactory business.
